

Project Director, Goshen College

Goshen College, located in Goshen, Indiana is building on its historic academic strengths, its Christ-centered core values, its experience in international education and its experience in educating ethnic and racial minorities by establishing the Center for Intercultural Teaching and Learning (CITL).

We are seeking a Project Director for the Center who will: 1) Give oversight to grant-related activities and initiatives underway on campus; 2) Chair the leadership team for grant oversight; 3) Report to the Vice President for Academic Affairs and Academic Dean and work with other Vice Presidents as needed; 4) Carry primary responsibility for the center's external relations and development work, especially through contacts with institutions, agencies and foundations to build relationships that will sustain both the activities and ongoing funding for the center. PhD or EdD preferred. Master's degree required. At least 3 years administrative experience required. Higher education experience preferred. Expertise required in intercultural education, project management, development, research management and financial management.

A major grant of $12.5 million from Lilly Endowment, Inc. has given Goshen College the unique opportunity to establish a Center for Intercultural Teaching and Learning \(CITL\), funded from September 2006 to August 2011. Goshen College expects to continue the center in future years. Together with Lilly Endowment, Inc., we expect this grant will enable the college to become a national leader in understanding how small liberal arts colleges can best serve the educational needs of rapidly increasing Latino immigrant populations. The college expects that what is learned from implementing this grant will better enable the college to also enroll and retain other minority students.

Review of applications will begin in January 2008. Employment is to begin early in 2008, no later than July 1, 2008.
